Commas

Commas in sentences let the reader know there is a short pause. Commas make the meaning clearer by separating parts of the sentence. Punctuate the following sentences, inserting commas where you think a short pause is needed.

1. If you like to see lots of people and many shops you may choose a busy city.
2. Sometimes communities just happen like when people become friends at school.
3. The Amish people wear simple modest clothes don't use telephones have no electricity and use horse-drawn buggies for transport.
4. As late as the 1890s people rarely had much to do with anyone more than 30 kilometres away as it took too long to get there.
5. On the Internet you can find people online around the world who share your interests.

Make a crossword

Make your own crossword about communities. Write the clues for words going across, and for words going down. Colour in any empty spaces.
